75th Anniversary of the Surrender is Reenacted Over National Network

LEE: Then—there is nothing left for me to do but to go and see General Grant, and I would rather die a thousand deaths!

VENABLE: Oh no, sir!

Off.2: Surrender? Oh, General! Off. 3: General, what will history say of the surrender of the army in the field?

LEE: How, I know they will say bard things of us. They will not understand how we were overwhelmed by numbers. But that is not the question, Colonel. The question is: Is it RIGHT to surrender this army. If it is right, then I will take all the responsibility.

OFFICERS: (Subdued murmuring of protest)

LEE: How easily I could be rid of all this! And be at rest. I have only to ride along the line, and—all will be over. But— it is our duty to live. What will become of the women and children of the South if we are not here to protect them?

NARRATOR: Thus developed the negotiations for a suspension of hostilities and the historic meeting between the Union and Confederate leaders. General Lee, having sought the council of his staff, (music low) was firm in his resolution to stop the further flow of blood, and at length a rendezvous was set for the final scene of the tragic conflict. A rendezvous, oddly enough in the very home of the man on whose property the war's first battle had been fought. This singular irony was brought about by the owner's distaste for the war, his relinquishment of the farm on Bull Run where the Battle of First Manassas had taken place, and his subsequent purchase of the house at Appomattox Courthouse. Early on the afternoon, of the same day, April ninth, General Lee was seated by a small table at the far end of the parlor in the appointed house. (No pause in dialogue) SOUND: Ticking of clock. Fade in.)

His handsome gauntlets lay beside him on the table. His impeccable uniform revealed not a trace of the war's ravages; a sword with no battle scars hung at his side; his noble countenance was serene and composed. Colonel Marshall and the Union Officer, Colonel Babcock, have offered little in the way of conversation. There are long silences in the last half-hour.

Sound Up: Ticking of clock. Silence —Waiting —waiting —

SOUND: Rattle o f spurs and swords. Continue under Narrator. Heavy steps.

There is a stir at the door . The sound of spur and sabre., the sound of military boots upon the step and across the broad verander, (Quick echo) SOUND: Opening of door. Slight pause. Then step.

GRANT: General Lee. It i s a privilege to meet you, General.

LEE: Thank you, General Grant. Will you be seated?

GRANT: Thank you, sir. I met you once before, General Lee, while we were serving in Mexico. You as General Scott's chief of staff, and I was Zachary Taylor's brigade. I think I should have known you anywhere.

LEE: Yes, I recollect our having met on that occasion.

GRANT: This has been my first opportunity to admire your countryside, General. The roads at this time have left us little leisure.

LEE: There will be little leisure for any of us, General. But I fervently hope that there will be no necessity for further effusion of blood.

GRANT: That is a hope in which I sincerely concur.

LEE: I suppose, General Grant, that the object of our present meeting is fully understood. I asked to see you to ascertain upon what terms you would receive the surrender of my army.

GRANT: The terms I propose are those stated substantially in my letter of yesterday; that is, the officers and men surrendered to be paroled and disqualified from taking up arms until properly exchanged, and all arms, ammunition and supplies to be delivered up as captured property.

LEE: Those are about the conditions I expected to be proposed.

GRANT: Yes, I think our correspondence indicated pretty clearly the action that would be taken.

LEE: I presume, General Grant, that we have both carefully considered the proper steps to be taken, and I would suggest that you commit to writing the terms you have proposed.

GRANT: Very well, I will write them out. General Parker.

PARKER: Yes, sir.

GRANT: Will you let me have the writing materials, please, sir.

PARKER: Here they are, sir.

GRANT: Thank you.. (scratching of pen, as Grant repeats slowly to himself the words he is writing) In accordance with the substance of my letter to you (fade) of the eighth instant (fade out)

MUSIC:

GRANT: (Fading in, still writing and speaking to himself) Arms, artillery and public property to be parked and stacked and turned over to the officer appointed by me to receive them. (Pause) This will not embrace the sidearms of the officers, nor their private horses or baggage. This done, each officer and man will be allowed to return to their homes, not to be disturbed by United States authority so long as they observe their parotes and the laws in force where they may reside.

LEE: This will have a very happy effect on my army.

GRANT: Unless you have some suggestions to make in regard to the form in which I have stated the terms, I will have a copy of the letter made in ink and sign it.

LEE: There is one other thing I would like to mention. The cavalrymen and artillerists own their own horses in our army. Its organization in this respect differs from that of the United States. I would like to understand whether these men will be permitted to retain their horses.

GRANT: You will find that the terms as written do not allow this. Only the officers are allowed to take their private property.

LEE: (Slowly) No, I see the terms do not allow it; that is clear.

GRANT: Of course, I didn't know that the private soldiers owned their animals, but I think this will be the last battle of the war— I sincerely hope so— and that the surrender of this army will be followed soon by that of all the others, and I take it that most of the men in the ranks are small farmers, and as the country has been so raided by the two armies, it is doubtful whether they will be able to put in a crop to carry themselves and their families through the next winter without the aid of the horses they are now riding and I will arrange it this way: I will not change the terms as now written but I will instruct the officers I shall appoint to receive the paroles to let all the men who claim to own a horse or mule take the animals home with them to work their little farms.

LEE: This will have the best possible effect upon the men. It will be very gratifying and will do much toward conciliating our people.

MUSIC:

NARRATOR: The terms as stated and verbally revised were accepted by General Lee as the conference drew to a close., a meeting marked by consideration and magnanimity on the part of General Grant, and the perfect composure of graceful defeat on the part of Lee.

(Note: The announcer then presented, Dr. Douglas Southall Freeman, who concluded the program.)

Bantam Chickens Prove Profitable

About the smartest creature with feathers is the bantam chicken. Such characteristics of bantams as intelligence, small size and small feeding requirements, the fact that they produce eggs has made them favorites in many sections of the country. Many families keep a bantam for about the same reason that they keep a dog.

The profit of the breeder and fancier is high as compared with maintenance, as these miniatures only consume one-fifth as much as the large breeds. Buyers will pay from $1.50 to $4 for a setting of quality eggs. Breeders sell single birds from $2 to $15, while fanciers readily refuse twice that price.

It's not expensive to house bantams. If they are to be raised on the ground a yard 4 by 12 feet will provide ample space for a rooster and two hens—for breeding purposes. If housing is for eggs, six or eight hens can be raised in this same space.

A number of bantam breeders are raising their stock on wire flooring. The same size pen or inclosure is used but it is raised about two feet off the ground. All ages develop well on wire flooring.

YOUNG FARMERS NEED INCENTIVE

Youth Must Be 'Sold' on Rural Life.

By EUGENE L. SPARROW

Through some hokus-pocus, characterizations of city life usually are taken from the exceptionally fortunate examples but the examples of country life are drawn from the "Grapes of Road" and "Grapes of Wrath" strain.

This custom of comparing the best of urban life with the worst of rural existence is an injustice to farm boys and girls and a threat to the welfare of the nation. Young men and women exposed through formative years to literature, art, movies and drama which distorts the true picture of city and country are likely to believe they can be happy only where success is measured in terms of millions.

The glare of city millionaires hides slums and poverty that are more typical of great cities than the immense wealth so often cited. The average amount of property accumulated by farmers is greater than the average for city workers.

Rural leaders must construct the publicity favorable to city life by teaching their children to share early in the responsibilities and the rewards of farm life. Encouragement for the boy or girl to raise live stock, gardens, or crops, and ownership of the profits help in making farming brighter for children.

Mechanical farm equipment has reduced the need for hand labor on farms and for laborers, but factory equipment likewise has reduced the number on shop payrolls. Choice of life in the city or country should be made by rural boys and girls on a basis of fact rather than fancy.

Separator Losses

How many dollars' worth of butterfat are you losing each year in the skimmilk from your separator? A sample taken to your local creamery or cream station can be tested. The cow tester is glad to render this service also. If operating efficiently, the average farm separator should not leave over 0.05 per cent butterfat in the skimmilk. Better let your dealer do your separator adjusting. Some chaps professing to be fine bowl may leave your machine in such shape that as much as one-tenth of your butterfat will be lost.

More Effective Sprays Produce Seedless Fruit

The technique of producing fruit from unpollinated flowers—known to scientists as parthenocarpy — advanced another step when scientists of the United States department of agriculture found two new growth substances—napthalene acetic acid and napthalene acetamide — are much more effective as pollen substitutes than substances used as sprays in previous tests.

The experiments, conducted by the federal bureau of plant industry, renew interest in parthenocarpic fruits, which develop normally but produce no embryos, or seed. Bananas and navel oranges are good examples of parthenocarpic fruits.

Most of the previous work, and all with the two new substances, has been with the holly plant. With holly, it is the set of female flowers are borne on separate plants. Berries develop only on the female plant after fertilization by insect-borne pollen from the male plant. In the tests, conducted by Dr. F. E. Gardner and P. C. Marth, the female plants were sprayed with weak solutions of the substances and covered with glassine bags to protect against pollination.

Both greenhouse and outside holly plants were sprayed. Using an 0.01 per cent solution, the strongest of three solutions used, 85 to 93 per cent of the flowers sprayed set fruit. The napthalene acetamide was slightly more effective than the napthalene acetic acid.

In previous experiments with strawberries, and using indole butyric acid as the spray, Dr. Gardner and Mr. Marth had partial success in growing a set of parthenocarpic fruit. The embryos did not develop, but the hard seed coverings or "achenes" grew just the same, giving the parthenocarpic fruit much the same appearance as normal berries.

Production of parthenocarpic fruits —free from seeds—would be commercially desirable in some fruits such as tomatoes which do not have hard seed covering about the embryo. At present the process is too expensive, yet because of the low concentrations needed, the cost is not prohibitive.

Battleship Type of Steel Used in Building Trailers

As fast as a new material is developed for use in war preparations, it finds its way into a number of other industries where it proves to be of equal or even greater value. Recently it was discovered that one of the latest types of steel, intended for battleships, will probably cover more miles of highway than it will of ocean and the perfect accuracy of its existence has been completed.

The new steel has been selected for the building of battleships because by its use it is possible to save 25 per cent in the weight of the armor and increase the speed of the battleship another 25 per cent. It is found also that because of the decrease in weight, a saving of 20 per cent in fuel is effected.

Exactly this same steel is being used for a new series of trailers. Thus the metallurgist who invented this steel for war purposes has made a marked contribution to the efficiency of motor transport on the highways.

GOOD DAIRY COW PAYS ITS 'BOARD'

High Producing Animals Prove More Profitable.

By ELMER J. MEADOWS

One dairy cow that produces 545 pounds of butterfat a year will return as much money above feed cost as two cows that produce 350 pounds, or more than 13 cows that average 182 pounds of butterfat annually. That's what experiments at the Colorado State college indicate, says Elmer J. Meadows.

One 545-pound cow will return $108 above feed cost during a year, according to figures Meadows has compiled from actual experience. This figure is based on butterfat selling at 40 cents a pound.

Two cows each producing 350 pounds of butterfat a year will return only $4 a year more above the feed cost than the 545-pound cow and will require 2161 feet compared to 1110, the feed cost of the large producer. Thirteen 182-pound cows will return $101.40 above feed cost during a year, and it will cost $689 to feed them.

If the extra labor required to milk and care for 13 cows producing 182 pounds of butterfat each compared to 2 producing 350 pounds each, is figured, it would further emphasize the necessity of keeping and breeding only cows with the ability to produce large amounts of milk and butterfat.

Just so the question evolves— "Why not take a few cows that produce at least 350 pounds of fat a year rather than a whole corralful of the 152-pound group that produces only about 20 pounds less than the average dairy cow in the United States?"

Time, Tide and a Horse

Anton Zmak, San Francisco, never had the advantage of a university course in oceanography and therefore knew nothing about tides. Owning a horse with an infected foot, he tied it under a wharf so its foot could soak in sea water. Then he went upstown. When he came back, the tide had come in and his horse was up to his chin in water.

At the Barber Shop

By LILA MONTROSS
(McClure Syndicate—WNU Service.)

"DON, dear," said Don's wife as Don appeared home from the office early one Saturday noon, "I'm so glad you came. I've been delayed so, and Baxter is disgracefully long. Gosh Baxter is coming tomorrow. I would never do. Be a dear and take Jerry down to the barber's and have his hair cut. And don't let them shave it up the back. I have to be very firm or they will."

"Oh, all right," said Don, planned to play golf—but all right. There was nothing very amusing in Don's voice, nor did he look amiable when his married friend called him "a sweet angel" and "a brother."

The barber shop at Ventry's Corners store was crowded as usual on Saturday afternoon, and Don found that he would have to wait number at the desk and read from the waiting room adjoining the barber shop.

Presently a portly, gray-haired gentleman with the room, a young girl of eighteen or so at her wake.

"I simply can't wait," she said, looking appealing around the room for sympathy. "My theater party! I've ordered them for tonight and they'll only hold them at the box office until four. I can't wait—here she looked with a shudder at her young charge—"Mother needs a boy frightfully." Mother apparently was protesting, for they could remain alone perfectly. "I'm not a child, auntie," Don heard.

The aunt's eyes had been watching about the waiting room, caught sight of Don Baxter, him briefly through her lorgnette and then sailed over to him.

"I'm going to ask a favor of you," she began. "I simply can't wait with my niece, and you look as if you could be trusted. Are you the busy boy's hair cut? I can see that they do Maybelle's hair as it should be. Maybelle took a seat rather disconsolately beside her newly appointed guardian.

"Aunt Bernice is very sweet," she said. "She seemed to think you were as old as she is." Don's there was a pause. "Isn't the little boy running?"

They waited fifteen minutes. Jerry's turn, and then Maybelle followed him into the barber's and sat beside Don while he had his haircut.

Then they returned to the waiting room and waited fifteen more for Maybelle's turn and Jerry and Don went into the barber's with her to wait until she was properly bobbed and singed and shingled according to instructions.

"Doesn't your wife wear her hair, Mr. —"

"Baxter—Don Baxter," said Don. And then: "My wife? I haven't any wife."

"But Jerry's mother—is dead?"

Don laughed. "His mother's sister. Why, I'm just a young bachelor myself."

They were back in the waiting room and had taken their seats when Ferguson, Myrtle Ferguson Trower and Annie Ferguson Capps, are not residents of Virginia, or if they are, their names, residences and addresses are unknown, hereby required to appear within ten days after the due publication of this order and do what is necessary to protect their interests.

Boys Shop At Local School Gives Practical Training to Students

Under the expert supervision of professor Virgil H. Gill, an excellent "shop" has gradually been equipped in the agricultural departmens of the Appomattox high school.

Realizing the demand for and the trend towards practical vocational training, the work shop has grown until it now is one of the most popular and most useful forms of study at the local school. Starting with an appropriation of $361 four years ago, professor has accumulated valuable machine equipment and tools.

Sixty-two boys are taking the shop course. We inspected the department this week and found in large class of boys busy on a wide variety of handicrafts. We found Huni Hamilton and E. D. Jones making a wheelbarrow. A chicken house record box occupied Charlie Jones and Hurley Trent. Jack Martin had several boys helping him at work on a baby bed. Another boy was making a handle for a hammer. Another had finished a "whatnot" and there were completed book racks, tables, etc. Someone had brought in a cider press to be repaired.

Professor Gill says he likes for the boys to make practical things for use around the farm and home. Materials are furnished at cost. The shop hope to get more and heavier equipment this fall. All in all, it is a department of which local school authorities can justly be proud and it is giving the boys one of the most practical possible sort of education.

A SPLENDID HOME RECIPE FOR GREY HAIR

Excellent Results. Big Saving. Easy to Mix Yourself. Restores Color to Hair. Get from your druggist.

1 ounce Bay Rum, 1-2 ounce Glycerine, 1-2 ounce Kuka Compound. Mix with 1-2 pint water. This gives you a bottle of the best gray hair preparation you can use. A rich natural looking color is restored to gray, streaked or faded hair. Will not wash out or rub off and does not effect permanents. It is not greasy or stinky and makes the hair soft and glossy. Simply brush into the hair several times a week. Try this home recipe to-day and see how much younger you will look.

Forecasting a Revolution

Jacques Casotte, French journalist, sat with many friends at dinner in a Parisian mansion one cold winter's night in 1788. Talk turned to politics and before it was finished Casotte predicted the French Revolution and indicated the fate of each of his fellows therein. They ridiculed him then, but every one of them died in the manner he predicted before and during the Terror. The French Revolution began with the storming of the Bastille by the Paris mob on July 14, 1789.
